In fact, dogs help people in some different ways. Police dogs, for example, work with police officers. They have a very powerful sense of smell and excellent hearing. They help find the missing people, catch the criminal and stop crime. Police dogs are brave and well-trained (训练). Search-and-rescue (搜救) dogs use their great senses of smell to find people who are lost. A search-and-rescue dog might help find someone missing after an earthquake. Search-and-rescue dogs are usually smart and large dogs. They can keep on working for many hours without getting tired. Other dogs work by guiding people who lost their sight and helping them get from place to place. Guide dogs help blind people make their way across busy streets. Such dogs have to be large too, and cannot be afraid of cars, loud noises or strangers. A dog that visits elderly people in nursing homes and hospitals is called a therapy (治疗) dog because its job is to make people feel better and less lonely. These dogs don't have to be big and strong. They can be small, cute and easy to train and get along with. In all, dogs are our friends. We should protect them and never hurt them. We should care for them and love them.
