reduce the number of deaths. Surely the best plan is driver-less technology.

Driver-less cars are no longer an idea of the future. With the technology for the driver-less car already developed for quite a long time, and some important inventions already seen in some cars, the driver-less car could soon be with us.

This is wonderful because driver-less technology is expected to reduce the number of road deaths;a research group in the United Kingdom says that driver-less cars will lead to 2, 500 fewer road deaths before 2030.

How are driver-less cars safer?Firstly, driver-less cars can help manage traffic. By using communication technologies to "talk" to each other, driver-less cars find the best roads. Information such as distance between cars, traffic and time it takes to get to the place is sent to the cars. This means fewer chances of these cars running into each other. Secondly, the use of driver-less cars means fewer accidents will happen because of human mistakes. For example, accidents caused by little sleep, drunk drinking or speeding will be avoided. Finally, the driver-less technology of the future, is expected to be more reliable than a human driver.

If lives can be saved by driver-less cars, let's hope these cars are on our roads very soon.

Kevin Michael Connolly began to love skiing when he was a child. He has skied and won medals in skiing competitions since 1999, and he has traveled all over the world taking photos. He's also written a book about his life — and it has been very successful. But the most unbelievable thing about Kevin is that he doesn't have legs. Kevin hasn't had a terrible accident or been in a disaster. He was born without legs.

Kevin's parents helped him to overcome the condition by raising him like any other child. He learned to "walk" using his hands, and he went to school with the other children from his neighborhood. Kevin grew up in Montana. Most Montana kids learn to ski, and Kevin did, too. He used special equipment, and he became a very good skier. He also hiked and camped in the mountains a lot.

After he finished high school, he studied Film and Photograph at Montana State University. Later, Kevin returned to his university to give a speech to welcome new students. Now he has his own TV show called Arm &Ready. On the show, Kevin travels to different places and faces different challenges. People love the show because they feel inspired when they see the world through Kevin's eyes. Kevin's excellent journey will change the way they look at others, and the way they see themselves.

(1)When did Kevin Michael Connolly begin to love skiing?

(2)What is the most unbelievable thing about Kevin?

_____.

(3)How did Kevin's parents help him overcome the condition?

_____.

(4)Where did Kevin study Film and Photograph?

(5)Why do people love Kevin's TV show?

_____.
